Myths About Being Single

- All singles, especially women, want to get married. Changes in our society have given women more options and benefits to staying single.
- Single men are irresponsible. Because some men know themselves well enough to know they are not ready for marriage, this does not make them irresponsible or afraid of commitment.
- Singles are sexually frustrated. According to several national studies of non-Christian singles, sexuality ranks fifth in order of importance in their lives.
- Singles are wild swingers. Single adults today are far more likely to throw themselves into a career.
- Finding the “right” person will solve all your problems. Being married is not an insurance policy for happiness, satisfaction, or fulfillment.
- Marriage is God’s highest calling. Is marriage preferred? Yes and no. Is it permanent? Yes, that is God’s design. Is marriage primary? No.
- All single adults are lonely. The loneliest people in the world are not singles. They are those married people whose hearts are miles apart while they sleep back to back.
- Singles are basically selfish. The reality is that they are no more selfish than people who are married. They just have no way to mask their selfishness. They can’t say, “No, because Johnny has a soccer game,” or “Gee, Ruth is not feeling well.” As a matter of fact, many singles have resources that they share freely with others.
